

Lucy's top tips on team leadership

What's it all about?

With over 855 million topics listed on a Google search of leadership, it can be difficult to know where to start if you're looking for guidance on the topic. We've drilled it down to the most important things that great managers and leaders, at every level, do

Our philosophy on...

We like to call that layer of managers between the front line and leadership the 'marzipan layer' because, like the marzipan that sticks the cake and the icing together, they play a crucial and influential role in every organisation

Who will benefit?

Anyone from first-time managers to experienced leaders

Books that will help:

The One-Minute Manager by Kenneth Blanchard and Spencer Johnson - a succinct book that describes straightforward ways to set goals, recognise achievement and handle under performance

How to Ride a Giraffe by John Timpson - the chairman of the family owned business Timpson describes how their upside-down management approach has helped the company survive for so long

Crucial Accountability by Patterson, Grenny, Maxfield, McMillan and Switzler - crucial techniques for handling conversations around setting expectations and handling broken commitments while preserving relationships

Visit these websites:

Start with you

Reflect on the impact you have and what you're role modelling; don't underestimate the influence this has on the people around you. Remember that what you do and say is affected by your mindset. Be an intelligent leader, reset any mindsets that may be hindering you to something more helpful

Embrace differences

The best teams have diverse members with different approaches. Encourage everyone to understand and value each other's uniqueness and the strengths they have. Bring teams together regularly to build trust and recognise whose combined talents work well together

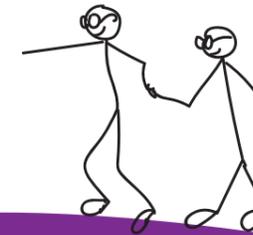

Be adaptable

Leadership isn't 'one size fits all'. Understand there are different approaches and be prepared to be a chameleon, switching between them, depending on people and situations. Learn how to recognise the signs that will help you understand which approach will work best. Extend this to the way you communicate and develop people

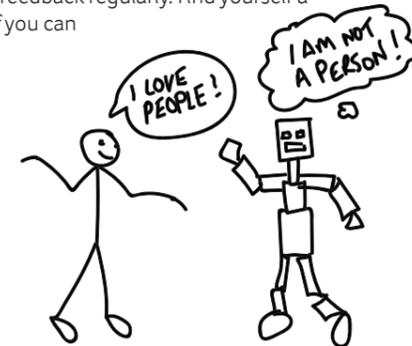

Nail your vision and share it

Know where you're heading; develop a clear and engaging strategic narrative for your team that helps them understand how what they do contributes to the organisation's vision. Revisit it regularly to check it's still the right direction and be prepared to change course if necessary, but don't forget to communicate that if it happens

Be passionate about personal development

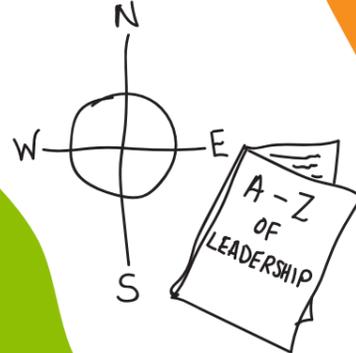

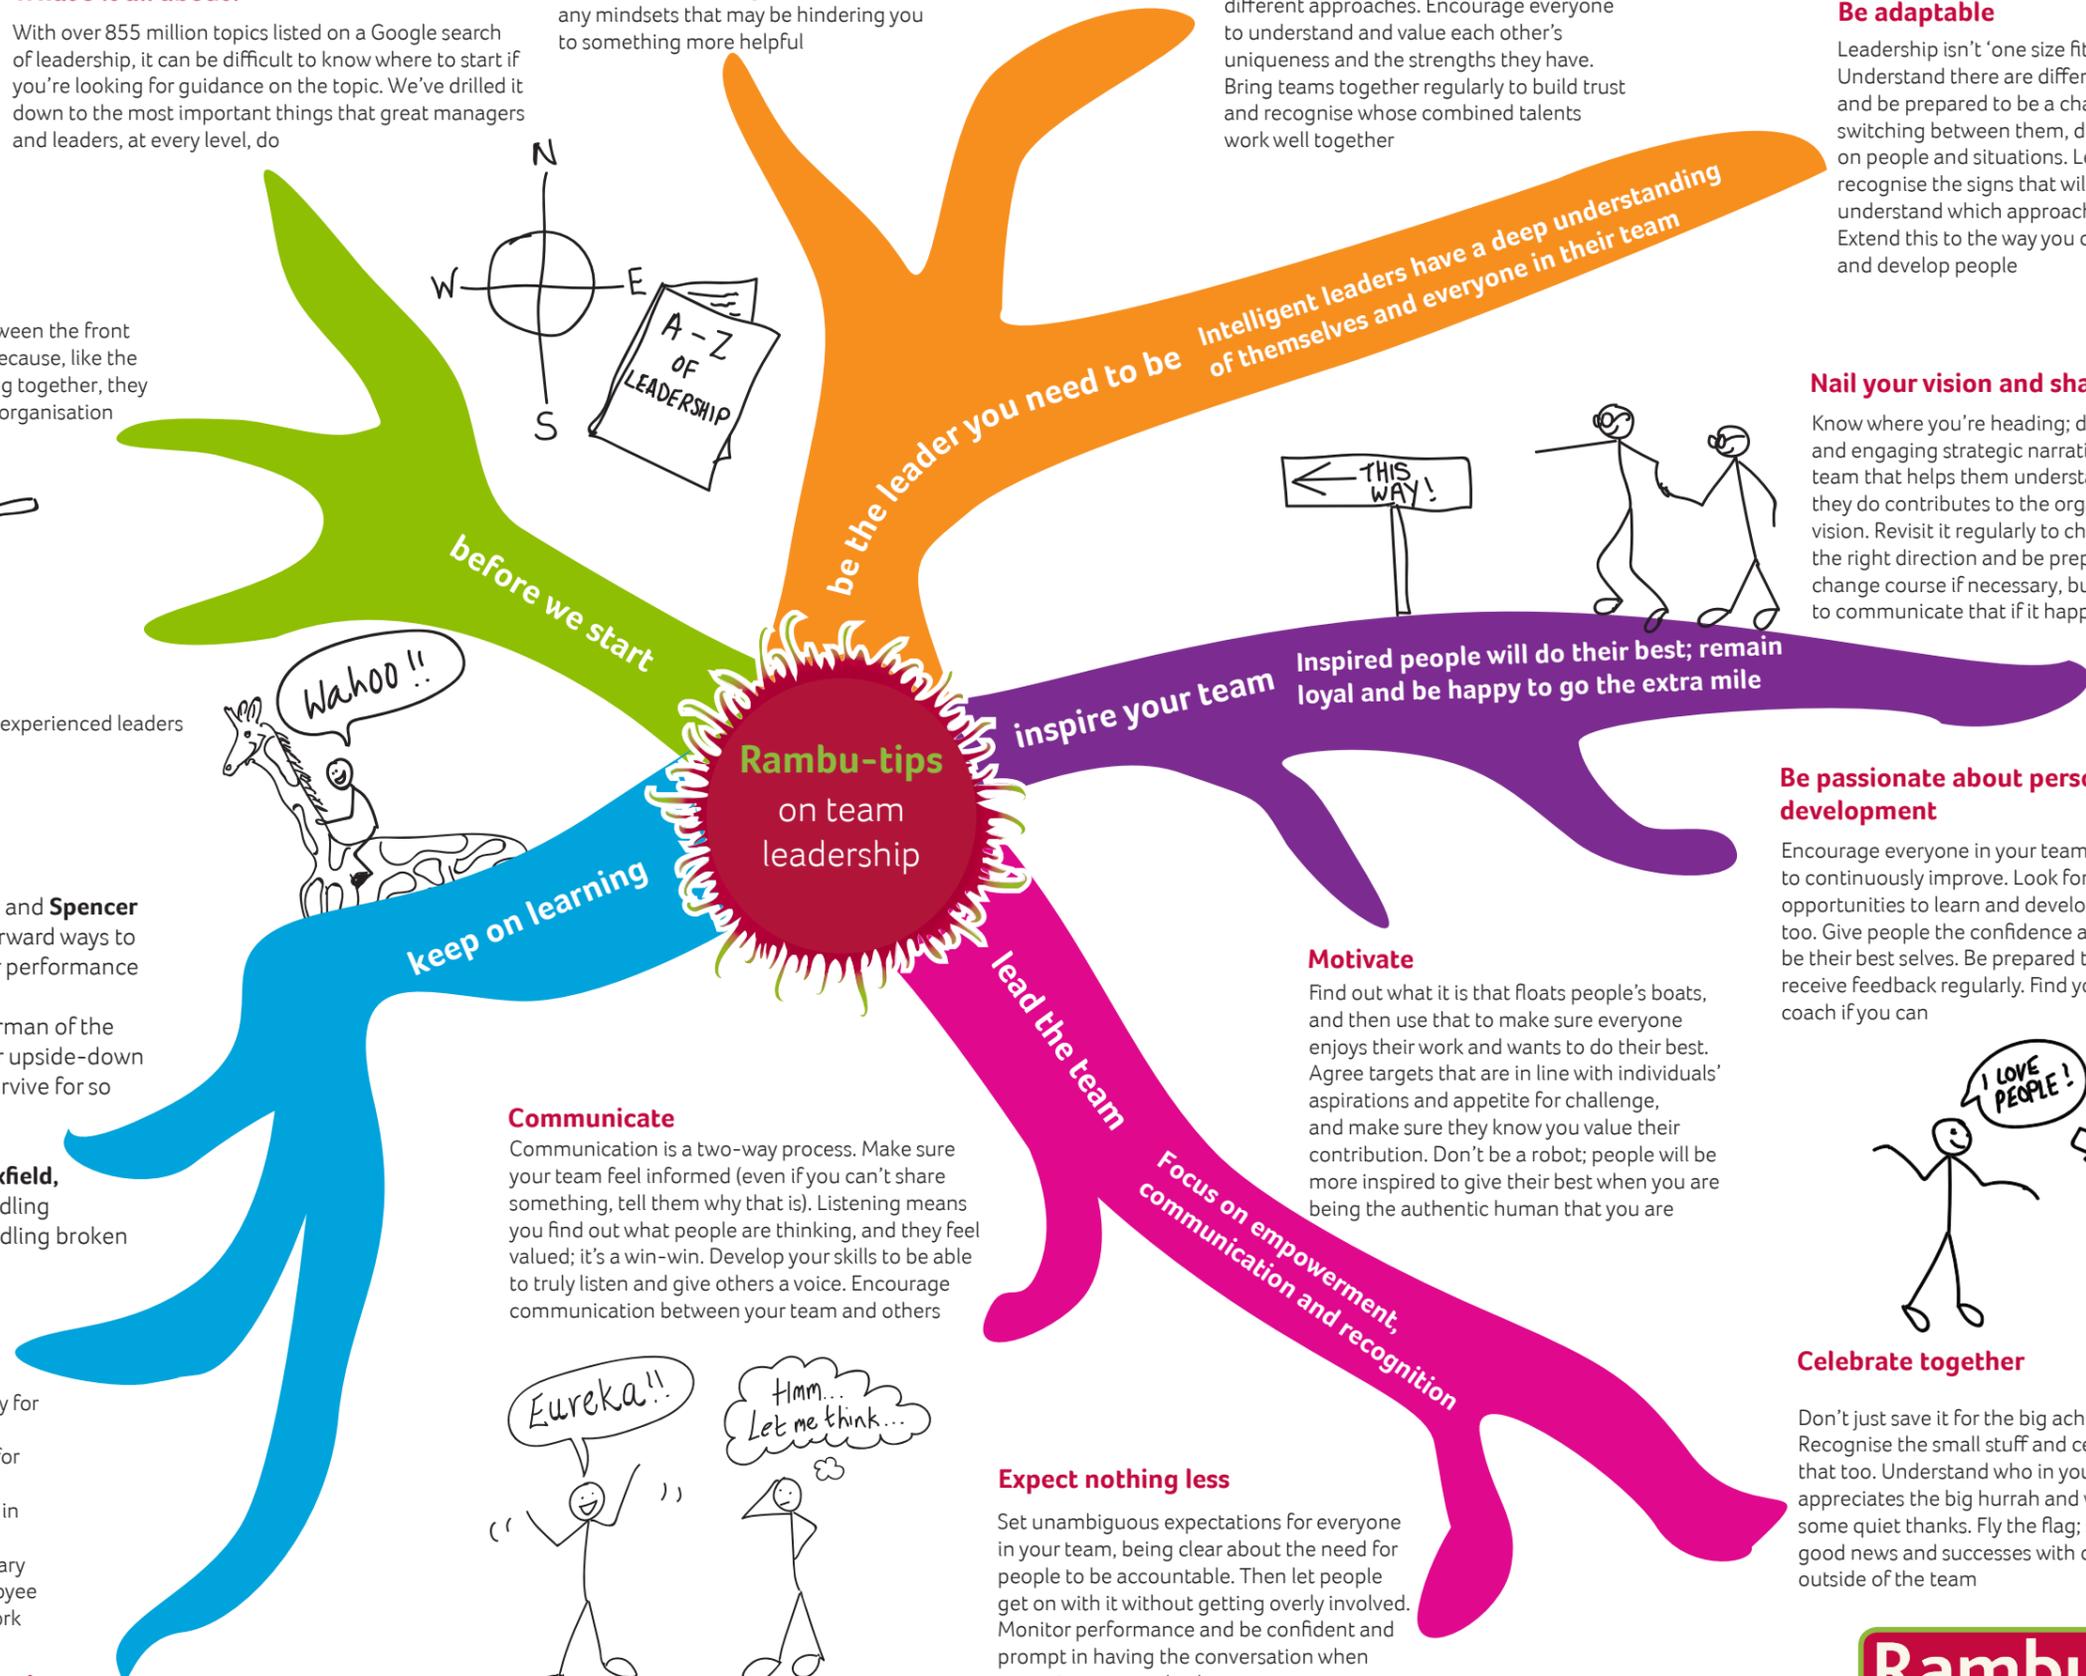

Encourage everyone in your team to continuously improve. Look for opportunities to learn and develop yourself too. Give people the confidence and skills to be their best selves. Be prepared to give and receive feedback regularly. Find yourself a coach if you can

Celebrate together

Don't just save it for the big achievements. Recognise the small stuff and celebrate that too. Understand who in your team appreciates the big hurrah and who prefers some quiet thanks. Fly the flag; sharing good news and successes with others outside of the team

Rambu-tips on team leadership

Motivate

Find out what it is that floats people's boats, and then use that to make sure everyone enjoys their work and wants to do their best. Agree targets that are in line with individuals' aspirations and appetite for challenge, and make sure they know you value their contribution. Don't be a robot; people will be more inspired to give their best when you are being the authentic human that you are

Expect nothing less

Set unambiguous expectations for everyone in your team, being clear about the need for people to be accountable. Then let people get on with it without getting overly involved. Monitor performance and be confident and prompt in having the conversation when commitments are broken
